

GAS MYSTERY REMAINS UNSOLVED

New Lenox Family Has Narrow Escape From Mysterious Lethal Gas

State's Attorney Wm. McCabe of Will County has been investigating an apparent attempted gassing Sunday night of the family of Leonard Wetzel, New Lenox milk dealer, but so far no clues have been found as to the cause of the gassing.

Victims of the poison gas attempt were Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Wetzel, their three children and the daughter of a neighbor. The attack took place in the Wetzel's four-room cottage on Prairie avenue in New Lenox Sunday night.

According to the story told deputies by Wetzel, who operates a small milk route, the family was gathered around the supper table at their home Sunday evening when the gas was first noticed. Besides Mr. and Mrs. Wetzel the group included their three daughters, Dorothy, 16; Virginia, 9; and Maxine, 2, and Stella Stevens, 12-year-old daughter of a neighbor.

During the progress of the meal two of the girls complained of not feeling well. A few minutes later the group finished eating and went into the front room. Wetzel was sleeping on a day-bed, his wife was reading and the four girls were playing on the floor.

Virginia was the first to feel the effects. She complained of a headache. Then one by one the entire group became very ill. Wetzel opened the windows of the house and took everyone outside, and then to Dr. Janette Holt, New Lenox physician.

All Recover
She said that the group was suffering from cyanide gas poisoning. Because of early treatment all six persons in the house today were entirely recovered from the effects of the gas.

Investigation disclosed that there was no possibility that the gases came from a gasoline stove in the kitchen, or from a stove in the front room. Some unknown person or persons, may have forced the gas into the house through some small opening with homicidal intent.

Deputies found tracks outside the house, apparently made by prowlers. This morning Chief Deputy Breen found a place on the side of the house where a board had apparently been ripped off and where it was possible for a person to have knelt while forcing the gas up through the floor. This theory was further substantiated by marks in the ground.

Authorities said that the gas could be manufactured by purchasing a certain poison sold in drug stores to kill rats. They said that it was possible to force the gas into a house with a rubber tube leading from the gas container.

Wetzel could give absolutely no motive. He said that he was not having any trouble with his milk route and that he had no enemies. He was inclined to believe that robbery might have been the motive, but authorities could not reason that any one would wish to wipe out an entire family for the small amount of money that might have been in the house.

Deputies pointed out that the coal stove, located in the front room, could have thrown off enough carbon monoxide gas to induce the sickness and nausea which attacked Wetzel, his wife, their three children and a neighbor's child as the group sat around the supper table at the Wetzel home Sunday evening.

Roller Skating New Amusement For Tinley Park

A new amusement feature for Tinley Park will be inaugurated next week by way of roller skating to be held every Wednesday evening and every Sunday afternoon and evening starting January 19th in the Saenger hall in Tinley Park.

To Hold Card Party

The Frankfort Musical Ensemble will hold a public card party in the Frankfort school basement Friday, January 24 at 7:30 p. m. Prizes will be awarded and everyone is invited to attend.

Basketball Treat For Frankfort

There will be four games of basketball played between Chaney and Frankfort next week Wednesday evening, January 22 at 7 p. m., at the Frankfort hall. The admission is small. The games will be played between the Chaney Bantams, Lights, Girls, and Heavies against Frankfort's Bantams, Lights and Girls, and Frankfort High School boys. Refreshments will be sold. Everyone is invited to come and see these thrilling games. We'll be waiting for you.

YOUNG MOTHER SUCCUMBS TO LONG ILLNESS

Mrs. Harold Berg, aged 31 years, a resident of Tinley Park for over ten years, died at her home at 2 a. m., Wednesday morning. She had been in poor health for a long time.

Surviving are the husband and three children.

Funeral services will be held in Chicago Friday morning.

Mokena Business Men's Asso. Made New Awards Sat.

The first awards under the new two-prize plan was made by the Mokena Business Men's Association last Saturday night in the Cooper & Hostert garage, which was packed by a large and enthusiastic crowd. The first prize of $15 went to G. W. Dunn, principal of the Mokena public school and the $5 award went to Charles Hostert.

More trade coupons are being given than ever before and the trade stimulating campaign which has been in progress for two months or more, has brought real definite results and the Business Men's Association are going to continue awarding the weekly cash prizes for an indefinite period.

Other interest creating features may be considered for the summer months when the open air awards will be made.

More people are trading in Mokena than ever did before and Saturday nights it is nothing uncommon to see 100 cars in town, whereas other times, hardly half a dozen cars were seen in town.

Telephone Co., Reduces Sunday Toll Rates

Reduced Sunday rates for long distance calls were announced Tuesday Jan. 14, by the Bell Telephone Company.

It also was stated that beginning Wednesday Jan. 15, there will be reductions on person-to-person long distance calls every night after 7 o'clock and all day Sunday. Herebefore there have been no reduced rate periods for person-to-person calls.

The new Sunday rates will be the same as the night rates. These reductions apply to nearly all calls on which the day station-to-station rate is more than 35 cents. The reductions on station-to-station calls range from about 10 percent on some of the shorter calls to 40 per cent or more on distant calls.

Evening and Sunday person-to-person calls are now reduced about the same amount in money as station-to-station reductions between the same places.

D. P. TETER FORMER MOKENA DOCTOR DIES

Dr. D. P. Teter, who was a practicing physician in Mokena in 1904 and 1905, and who has been a practicing physician at 1726 Beacon street in Chicago for thirty years, died last Wednesday of a heart attack. He was 69 years old. He had been on the staff of the Swedish Covenant hospital and at one time was medical warden at the Cook County hospital.

Surviving are his widow, Effie, a son Park, and a daughter, Mrs. Marye Norris.

Funeral services were held last Saturday afternoon at four o'clock in the chapel at Graceland cemetery.

While located in Mokena Dr. Teter had his office in the building now occupied by August Braun's pool room on Front street and resided in the house now occupied by Mrs. Moriarty.

Tinley T. Y. O. Beats Midlothian Teams

In two fast but loosely played basketball games, the Tinley Park teams came out on top. The contenders were the Midlothian teams who fell victims to the onslaughts of the Tinley teams.

New suits and all, the TYO girls team held the Midlothian girls to 7 points while amassing 19 themselves. The boys, not to be outdone rallied for a 26 to 21 victory.

Although never headed, the Tinley Park boys were closely pursued throughout the last half providing many tilts and thrills for the fans.

Next Friday night, Jan. 17th at 7:30 p. m., the TYO girls will meet the Brownies of Blue Island while the TYO boys tangle with Lemont.

If you want to see two good games come out and see your teams in their class uniforms.

Probable Lineups

Girls: Hirsch, V. Rice, H. Rice, Freitag, Moss.

Boys: Olsen, Meyer, Devlin, Swisher, Klepper.

AAA Decision Arouses Fighting Spirit On Farm

News of the Supreme Court's decision invalidating the Agricultural Adjustment Act was met by Illinois farmers with a militant spirit of determination to continue the fight for equal privileges and price parity, reports the Illinois Agricultural Association.

Telegrams and messages from Illinois County Farm Bureaus received at IAA headquarters in Chicago pledged their continued efforts in the fight to frame a program that meets the objectives set forth in the Act killed by the 6 to 3 vote.

The board of directors of the Henderson County Farm Bureau telegraphed: "Henderson county's answer to AAA ruling is 100 new fighting members within 10 days." At a meeting of 150 Farm Bureau leaders from six adjoining counties at Monmouth, January 8, a resolution pledging continued support to secure "a fair share of the nation's income for agriculture with government assistance comparable to that legislated to other important groups," was unanimously carried.

"County organization committee in regular session today pledged their united support to you in meeting present agricultural situation," said A. E. Staley, president of the Edgar County Farm Bureau, in a message to Earl C. Smith, president of the State Association before Mr. Smith left for Washington with Pres. Edw. A. O'Neal and other Farm Bureau leaders.

"Farmers of Will county ready to fight for equality for agriculture in spirit of Supreme Court decision," wired H. J. Schroeder, president of the Will County Farm Bureau at Joliet. "Farm Bureau organizing membership drive in every township."

"Press forward. Farmers ready for call at your service," telegraphed Wilbur R. Gibbs, president of the Scott County Farm Bureau at Winchester.

Similar sentiments were expressed by telegraph and telephone from other counties. The decision has aroused the fighting spirit of Illinois farmers comparable to that resulting from the successive vetoes of the McNary-Haugen bill more than seven years ago. Farmers generally favor some program under present constitutional limitations if that is possible.

To Hold Bunco

St. Michael's church at Orland Park will sponsor a card and bunco party in the church hall January 25. Everyone invited.

MRS. A. MCGOVNEY PASSES AWAY IN GARDENIA, CALIF.

Word has been received by Mokena relatives of the Arthur McGovney family former Mokena residents now located in Gardenia, California, that Mrs. McGovney died January 6 following a lingering illness. She was 64 years old.

Surviving are her husband, two daughters Jean and Janette, one son Hugh.

Mr. McGovney who is an attorney resided with his family in Mokena about 23 years ago. At one time they resided in the residence now occupied by John Walsh and later resided in the old McGovney homestead on Front street.

Some More Old Time Watches Located In Tinley

There is a keen rivalry among owners of old watches in this section. Here are two interesting old time pieces.

Mrs. Wm. Mancke of Tinley Park has a coin silver engraved Waltham watch received in 1886 in a trade for a large size watch in Berlin, Ontario. This time piece is over fifty years old.

Mrs. Henry Nieman also of Tinley Park has a nickel open face watch 58 years old.

Wm. Hollstein owns a watch that was bought forty years ago and Henry Brandau has a timepiece bought 47 years ago. All these old watches have ticked away thousands of hours and are still in daily use and keeping excellent time.

Key Wound Watch In Daily Use By Orland Supervisor

Charles Doctor, the venerable and genial supervisor of Orland Township, has a very interesting collection of old time mementos.

In speaking of old time watches, Supervisor Doctor has a real old timepiece by way of a key-set and key-wound silver case watch, which he bought in 1881 and has been wearing ever since. The watch keeps excellent time. Mr. Doctor received two keys with the watch and still has them, never having lost either one. He winds the watch each day with the keys.

The watch was purchased from the E. V. Roddin Co., at 150 State street, Chicago.

The same time the watch was purchased, Mr. Doctor's mother bought a pair of gold rimmed spectacles which are in perfect condition and is highly prized by Mr. Doctor.

Another very interesting keep sake, is a gold plated brooch in the shape of a horn-of-plenty which Mr. Doctor's father, Joseph Doctor Sr., brought from California in 1854 as a present for his wife. The elder Mr. Doctor brought the brooch over a stretch of thousands of miles. He crossed the Isthmus of Panama on mule back after leaving California.

He had prospect for gold and had been successful in amassing a small fortune with which he purchased farm land upon his return to this section.

In company with several other men, he set out from Lockport for California gold fields making the overland trip in three months which was considered quite fast speed in those days.

Celebrate 15th Wedding Day

Mr. and Mrs. John Fietterer formerly of Frankfort township, now located at Monee, celebrated their fifteenth wedding anniversary last Sunday at their home.

They entertained the following guests at a three o'clock dinner: Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Steinberg of Manhattan, parents of Mrs. Fietterer, Andy Long and Arthur Steinberg also of Manhattan.

Mr. and Mrs. Fietterer received a very nice anniversary gift.

New Lenox V. F. W. Post To Hold Dance

The New Lenox V. F. W. Post, known as the "Baby Post" of Illinois will hold a closed charter dance and celebration at the Colonial hall in New Lenox on Sunday, February 2nd. All V. F. W. Posts and friends are invited. Dancing from 9 p. m. to 1 a. m. Plenty free parking. Refreshments will be served. The public is also cordially invited to attend.

Hundreds Expected At Big Tinley Fire Dept. Masked Ball Saturday

The one time in the year eagerly looked forward to in Tinley Park is the time-honored annual masquerade ball which the Tinley Park Volunteer Fire Department will hold in the Saenger hall in Tinley Park this coming Saturday night Jan. 18.

Prizes will be offered for the best dressed gentleman, best dressed clown, best colored gentleman, best dressed lady, best dressed farmerette, best colored lady, best dressed Irish lady, best group of five. Masks can be rented at the hall. The grand march will take place at 11 p. m. Music will be the Starved Rock Harmony Kings.

Between four and five hundred people are expected to attend this dance providing weather conditions are favorable. This is the usual yearly attendance.

A rousing good time is assured for all and everyone is heartily invited by the fire laddies to join in the fun.

Women's Clubs Hear Speeders Judge

Monday, over 450 women gathered in the Masonic Temple as guests of the Englewood Womens Club, for the mid-winter meeting of the Third district of the Illinois Federation of Womens Clubs. A very fine program was given by the Press, Radio, Lay and Conservation departments of the Club.

Miss Ruth De Young, Women's Editor of the Chicago Tribune, was most interesting. She told of being with the Tribune for the past six years and is now in the highest office of her department. In explaining the back ground for a reporter, she mentioned the advantages of an education, ability to get along with people, tolerance and resourcefulness. She told of Nellie Bly, the first woman reporter and who made a record trip around the world in 67 days. Snobbishness was tabooed according to Miss De Young and she also spoke of the wrong in discrimination.

The following slogan given by Miss De Young is worthy of remembering: "He lives most, who loves most, who enjoys most and who forgives most."

Mrs. Geo. Nipper, State Radio chairman, spoke of her work in broadcasting and told of their slogan, "Clean Up The Air". She advised writing to radio stations and program sponsors when one hears a program which is not good.

Dinner was served at 12:30 by members of the Englewood Club in their dining room.

When the meeting convened again at 1:30 o'clock, Miss Halloween Martin, who conducts the Musical Club program on WBBM each morning, spoke, telling most interesting facts concerning her broadcasts.

On the entertaining part of the program was, Madame Bowes and her amateur hour, who had a number of interesting auditions. However, only one received the gong.

Mr. S. A. Campbell, author and lecturer, was outstanding in his talk on "The Human Side of Conservation". He said that kindness is a tangible thing and is subject to development. Mr. Campbell does not believe in killing anything and if it must be, to do it mercifully. He said it was the business of every Continued on Back Page

SARAH RUST AGED ORLAND RESIDENT DIES

Mrs. Sarah Frances Rust, a resident of Orland Park since 1869, died January 11 in the home of her son Edward with whom she made her home. She attained the age of 89 years, 9 months and 3 days.

Mrs. Rust was born in Ireland, April 8, 1846 and came to America in 1867. In 1869 she was united in marriage with Joseph Rust and came from New York City to Orland. Here the couple resided on a farm for many years. To this union five children were born of whom two sons, Dr. John W. Rust and Joseph Jr., preceded her in death. Her husband died in 1928.

Surviving are two daughters, Mrs. W. R. Schussler, Orland Park; Mrs. Fred Meyer of Blue Island; one son, Edward Rust of Orland Park; eleven grand children and fourteen great grand children. She was the only surviving member of a family of twelve.

Funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon in the Orland Park M. E. church with the Rev. John Mullen officiating. Burial was made in the Cooper cemetery in Orland Park.

Will Show War Pictures

Wm. Martin Post No. 725, V. F. W. of the U. S., will sponsor the presentation of five reels of World War pictures actually taken at the front and released by the U. S. Signal corps for educational purposes.

These pictures will be presented at the Ann Rutledge school, Lincoln Estates, Illinois, on Sunday night, January 19 at 7:30 o'clock.

Everyone should see these pictures. There will be no admission charge. Everyone is invited. Come out and bring you friends.

Orland PTA Will Sponsor Play

The Orland Park P. T. A. will sponsor a play: "Miss Blue Bonnet" at the Orland school auditorium the nights of Jan. 23rd and 24th. This is probably the most elaborate amateur theatrical enterprise ever offered by that group. Be sure to see it.

Chas. Elder, Mokena To Broadcast Sat.

Attorney Chas. Elder of Mokena will broadcast over station WGN tomorrow afternoon, Saturday, at 4:45 o'clock.

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—President Roosevelt has told congress that he wants it to finish its labors and adjourn in short order. He has figured that about three months ought to give the members sufficient time to mull over the problems that confront them and that they then should return to their several homes. But the President is doomed to disappointment if he sincerely believes that he can get congress out of the Capital by the end of March. The best guess right now is that the congress will be in session at least four months and, it is well within the range of possibilities that it will remain in session almost to the time of the national conventions.

There are a number of factors that make realization of the President's early adjournment wish impossible of realization. Probably the most influential of these is the fact that this is a campaign year. Every member of the house and one-third of the senate, along with Mr. Roosevelt himself, are affected by the election date and politics must have its turn. Every four years this same condition obtains and every four years politicians do about the same things in furtherance of their own political interests. The bulk of the legislation to be considered has its political tinge. Politics even creep into the annual appropriation bills—and usually the result is a swelling of the totals in order that some gears of individual political machines may be oiled just a bit for smooth running in the campaign.

While the appropriation bills are important from a political standpoint, their weight in this session of congress sinks rather below par because there are such things as the bonus for the World War veterans, the Townsend old age pension plan, various New Deal reform measures and such replacement legislation as may be necessary since the Supreme court kicked over New Deal propositions like the Agricultural Adjustment act with its processing taxes and sundry other schemes. However the Roosevelt leaders in congress may desire to act, the machinery of legislation can be run only so fast in an election year.

One of the chief reasons why a congressional session in an election year drags on longer than usual is because of the publicity value the sessions have for individual representatives and senators.

Members of congress discovered a hundred years ago that the chambers of the house and senate constituted splendid sounding boards for the dissemination of political views. There has been increasing use of this potentiality as the years have gone by until now the older members of the house and senate have become very adept in capitalizing on this factor. It takes no stretch of the imagination to discover that a senator or representative, speaking from the floor of his respective chamber, gets much more publicity than his opponent back home who talks only as a private citizen. It is perfectly natural, therefore, that those members seeking re-election want to take full advantage of the publicity vehicle available to them in Washington.

The use of this publicity weapon is available to opponents of the New Deal as well as to its supporters. While the approaching election may be expected to knit the house Democrats more closely into a unified front for the November election, the same condition is not true in the senate. In that body, there are a number of old-line Democrats who do not like the New Deal and who are going to utilize every available opportunity to make their record as Democrats as complete as it is possible to do before they must speak to the home folks in person. It is obvious that such men as Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, cannot desert the Democratic ticket and run for re-election independently. So it is to be expected that men of this type will establish for themselves a comprehensive outline of their political beliefs as Democrats while distinguishing their position from that known as the New Deal. They must look to the future when, according to all indications, they feel the party machinery will again be controlled by the Jeffersonian type of Democrat instead of by the reform type of Democrat headed by men and women with the New Deal outlook.

An additional factor operating in the senate is the presence of two Republican Presidential possibilities in the persons of Senator William E. Borah of Idaho and Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan. Senator Borah is actively seeking pledged delegates to the Republican national convention. Senator Vandenberg says he is not a candidate, but the well-known bee is buzzing around and there are many observers who think that Senator Vandenberg is hoping that, in case of a convention stalemate, the assembled delegates may riot and turn to him as the nominee.

Such a condition means, as it has meant before, that these two men will desire to see all of the political issues aired in congressional debates. It is only natural and logical as well that the Republican minority in the house and senate will seek to foment as much debate as possible in order to obtain a record of what the majority party thinks or proposes to do if returned to power.

In all respects, the session will be the most political, therefore, since Mr. Roosevelt took office. His Presidential message on the state of the Union already is being kicked back and forth and picked to pieces in the preliminary campaign gunfire. There is simply no way by which this situation can be avoided. The opening of congress was the opening of the 1936 campaign.

In an earlier letter, I reported to you concerning the question of a neutrality policy and declared at that time that it was the most important item to come before the current session. It remains so. I believe the situation is even more delicate than in my earlier analysis of this problem and it may well be that congress will stall along in reaching a decision on this policy in order to give foreign developments an opportunity to manifest themselves further. The administration apparently is willing to let congress work out the legislation without much interference but the leaders realize that a decision will be difficult as long as foreign maneuvers continue to present an almost daily change in the scenery.

Reference is made to the neutrality question here because it is one of the things entering into the combination that will cause a longer session than the President wishes.

There seems to be no doubt that passage of a bill to pay the soldiers' bonus at an early date will be accomplished in this session. Likewise, there is hardly the shadow of a doubt that if congress passes such legislation and Mr. Roosevelt vetoes it, the bill will be passed over the veto. It is a campaign year and it is not a good time for politicians to antagonize an organization with the vast membership of the American Legion or the other groups of ex-service men. This legislation will not contribute much to the length of the session but in all such cases representatives and senators must make their speeches and be on record as to why they voted for or against a bill.

The Townsend plan cannot get anywhere in the current session. I do not mean that it will be dodged as a subject of discussion. This is impossible. There will be plenty of debate on it. In the end, however, it will be sidetracked.

Then, there was a flock of inflationary schemes due to horn in on the parade as the session moves forward. Farm mortgage refinancing is one of them. It is unfortunate that the inflationists—those who are willing to prostitute the currency in any manner—are leading in this fight.

In all probability, also, the current session of congress will be called upon to meet some problems resulting from adverse decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States. The court has before it any number of cases involving New Deal policies, including such as the AAA, the TVA with its Tennessee Valley power yardstick, the attempt to regulate wages and hours of labor under the Guffey coal bill known as the Little NRA, and a half dozen other policy propositions. It seems unlikely, although no one can guess, that all of these measures will be held constitutional. If any are held invalid, naturally the President will ask congress to draft new legislation.

As a sample of the political aspect of the current session, one can sight the furor that was stirred up when President Roosevelt delivered his message on the state of the Union to a night session of congress. Except for one instance, Presidents always have delivered or sent their message to congress at noon of a day after the session has had two or three meetings. Mr. Roosevelt chose to get his message to congress on the very first day of the current session but in order to do it and allow for consummation of the usual routine of the opening day, it was necessary to hold a joint session at night.

The White House announcement of this decision immediately precipitated a biting demand from Henry P. Fletcher, Republican national chairman. Mr. Fletcher charged that since the President's speech was being delivered "out of hours" and was being broadcast to potentially the greatest radio audience ever to listen to a Presidential message of this kind, the broadcasting companies must agree to allocate time for the Republicans to answer it. The Republican chairman asserted that the message was reduced to the "common level of a political speech" and so he demanded for the opposition the right to analyze it from the opposition standpoint through the same number of radio stations and to potentially the same radio audience.

ILLINOIS BREVITIES

Mrs. Dorothy Gustafson Foster, thirty-eight, of Silvis, died as the result of burns suffered when a gasoline stove exploded in her home.

Jonas Baker of Mattoon, fifty-five, packing plant employee, dropped dead from a heart attack while rabbit hunting.

Frank Brock, twenty-one, of Maroa, was found dead in a corn elevator at Emery. He was trapped under the grain when he entered the elevator to dislodge frozen corn.

The frozen body of James Shaffer, sixty-one, of Ottawa was found in a CCC camp shelter along the Illinois-Michigan canal west of the city. Shaffer is believed to have died of the cold.

The body of Richard Johnson, fifty-one years old, a farmer eight miles east of Pontiac, was found in a corn field by relatives. He had been in ill health for several years.

Paul M. Collins, retired Will county banker and attorney, died in his home at Peotone. He was sixty years old and had been a resident of Peotone all of his life.

Two infant daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Orville Harper were burned to death when fire destroyed their small frame house on the outskirts of Belleville.

Thomas Lamb, eighty-nine, died in Bement. He was a former state representative, president of the Bement Grain company, and active in farm organization work.

Loran Springer, thirty, farmer, living near Milton, admitted to a coroner's jury that he fired the shot which fatally wounded his father, Charles Springer, sixty-four-year-old Pike county farmer. He said he fired in self defense.

Albert J. Prignano, of Chicago, state representative of the Seventeenth senatorial district and Democratic committeeman of the Twentieth ward, known through years of political battles as the "Bloody Twentieth," was assassinated on the doorstep to his home. Three gunmen shot him in the back as he was returning from a family party with his wife, eight-year-old son, and mother-in-law.

Charging his dismissal from the medical staff of the Saline county emergency relief commission has damaged his reputation as a physician and surgeon, his practice, and his income. Dr. Grover C. Ferrell of Eldorado has filed suit in Eldorado City court for $25,000 damages. Nathan Schwartz, county chairman of relief, and Miss Margery N. Fowler, county administrator, are named defendants.

States officials of Indiana and Illinois signed reciprocity agreements applying to the operation of trucks in the two states. The agreements eliminated Indiana weight taxes on Illinois trucks operating in Indiana and similar Illinois taxes on Indiana trucks operating in this state. The agreement, however, does not apply to Illinois trucks used in intra-state hauling in Indiana nor Indiana trucks used similarly in Illinois. They must have both Indiana and Illinois licenses.

K. L. Ames, Jr., director of the state department of finance, announced that the state of Illinois has operated on a balanced budget during 1935. "During the year the state has lived within its income without recourse to borrowing," he said. "All expenses have been covered by current tax revenues. This includes unemployment relief cost and increased state aid to local school districts as well as other state expenses. At the present time the state is aiding local school districts at the rate of more than $1,000,000 per month, and is contributing over $2,000,000 per month to unemployment relief."

Illinois relief stations, serving 185,000 families, were ordered to close their doors on January 15 unless $3,000,000 is obtained from some source in the meantime to make up total requirements of $5,865,911 for January. This decision was reached at a conference between Governor Horner and members of the Illinois Emergency Relief commission. At Washington, spokesmen for Harry L. Hopkins said the national government is doing all it intends to do for Illinois in creating 183,500 jobs under the Works Progress administration, and that Illinois must shift for herself in raising direct relief cash.

Over strong objections, the Illinois State Teachers association, in session in Springfield, gave tacit approval to the sales tax as one source of revenue to obtain a proposed increase from $13,000,000 to $30,000,000 yearly in the state school distributive fund. Frank A. Jensen, La Salle high school superintendent, was named president to succeed C. E. Vance of Danville. Vice presidents elected were Orville T. Bright of Plossmoor, W. C. Handlin of Lincoln, and W. R. McIntosh of Olney. Charles McIntosh of Monticello was re-elected treasurer and Samuel Sullivan of West Frankfort was named as a member of the executive committee.

An illicit alcohol still with a capacity of 40,000 gallons, was seized on a farm near Harrison by federal agents. A huge barn had been remodeled to house the equipment. Adalbert Glessman, who operated the farm, and Clarence Stannard, hired man at the farm, were arrested.

Miss Kate Mackey, one hundred and three, died at her home in Ottawa. She was Ottawa's oldest resident, and was one of the half dozen persons living there who attended the first Lincoln-Douglas debate and shook hands with Abraham Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas later.

Dust Their Downfall

St. Paul friends of Joseph Zozlow-ski, twenty-two years old, and Boyd Gilman, twenty, wrote the names of the pair in the dust on a car they drove when they visited at Litchfield, Minn. The car, abandoned later in Minneapolis, was identified as stolen from D. R. Pedalty. It still carried the names. Kozlowski got ten years in prison, Gilman a suspended sentence.

Winter-Born People Found Lower in IQ Than Others

Are people born in the winter as intelligent as those born in the summer? No. At least, Prof. Rudolph Pintner and Dr. George Forlano, psychologists of Teachers college, Columbia, report in the Journal of Educational Psychology a study they made of the intelligence quotients—now known as the IQ's—of 17,502 children and young people, and they found those born in the winter had a slightly but consistently lower score on intelligence tests than those born during the other months.

They suggest this is probably because more winter-born babies have serious diseases that impair their constitutions.

15 Billions Is Economic Value of Thomas Edison

The economic value of Thomas Edison, or the value of the equipment and devices which have been made from his patents, is estimated at $15,000,000,000.

This means that from the time of his first patent in 1864 up to the present he has been responsible for the production of nearly $600,000 worth of property every 24 hours.—Collier's.

Bashful Irishman Offers Lady Friend a Rare Treat

Some time ago a young Irish farmer in the County Kilkenny was very much in love. He wanted to marry the girl, but being a shy lad he couldn't for the life of him ask her outright to marry him. He felt he would choke if he tried to mention the words marry or marriage to her. So, after taking much earnest, shrewd thought on the problem, he asked her in a whisper one evening: "Julia, how would you like to be buried with my people?"—Chicago Tribune.

RESOLVED - TO SAVE TIME AND MONEY THIS YEAR WITH Firestone GROUND GRIP TIRES

SELF CLEANING

THE best New Year's resolution you can make is to put your car, truck, tractor, and all your farm vehicles on Firestone Ground Grip Tires.

These remarkable tires make their own road — wherever they go. That is why they will take your car or truck through mud, snow, or over unimproved roads — and you will not need chains.

On tractors and farm implements, Ground Grip Tires enable you to do more work in less time at a considerable saving in fuel. The great flexibility of the Gum-Dipped cord body cushions the shocks of rough going and protects costly equipment against vibration and breakage. They make equipment roll easier, reducing draft more than 50%.

No farmer can afford to be without Ground Grip Tires. See your nearby Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store or Firestone Tire Dealer today and resolve to end your traction troubles with Ground Grip Tires.

FASCINATING TALES OF LOST MINES

By Editha L. Watson

THE WHITE CEMENT

AN OLD man, exhausted and ill, started a stampede that was once the talk of the Southwest.

It was in July of 1868 that the prospector, who was named White, staggered into Horse Head gulch camp, near Amarillo, Texas. He had some peculiar-looking stuff with him that resembled nothing so much as white clay or cement, and this strange "ore" was specked with flecks of gold. In fact, assay showed that the stuff would run a thousand ounces of gold to the ton.

White's gold find could not be kept secret. The news flashed from man to man, and everyone who heard it was eager to know where the location was, so that he could get some of this wealth for himself. White tried to keep quiet; he had no desire to tell, when he knew that every man who heard it would dash out and stake claims. But his wish for secrecy was not respected. When he refused to answer questions, the men of the camp gathered about him and threatened to kill him if he would not show them where he found his gold.

After such threats, White could do nothing but promise to lead them to the place right away. As many as could possibly get away followed him, and the strange, fierce cavalcade set out for northern New Mexico.

The journey was not a pleasant one. Many of White's party were suspicious of him, and when time went on and no gold appeared they threatened again to kill him if they found that he had been misleading them.

At last, one night the party reached a blind canyon and made camp. One more day, White announced, would see them at his find, which was thirty-five miles to the northwest. Tired out, their suspicions lulled by White's words, the men slept soundly—all but White himself. He said that he was nervous, since he was so close to the mine. He could not sleep for thinking of it. And since he was awake, he would stand guard while the others slept.

This was agreeable to the rest. They were soon fast asleep, resting for the long ride ahead of them.

Morning came, and with its first light the men awoke, eager to press on. But what was this? White was nowhere to be seen, and his horse also had disappeared! He had slipped away in the night, leaving them as ignorant of the location of the gold as they had been at first.

Three years after this clever ruse, White was seen in Salt Lake City, where he spent money liberally. He loaned a man in Provo $50,000 in gold dust, so apparently his "cement" mine was still producing. Then he disappeared. He never returned to claim his money. No one heard of him or saw him again.

THE ADAMS' DIGGIN'S

THE Gila river, which seems so much a part of Arizona, has its headwaters in New Mexico. There are three forks which meet before the state line is reached, and the country thereabouts is known only to forest rangers and cowboys, who ride the reaches of the Heart Bars, the Slashes, the Gos, and other lonely ranches.

It was in 1860 that a party of fifteen men set out from California to prospect in the mountains to the east. A prisoner of the Yuma Indians man aged to catch their attention, and this man told them that he knew where there were wonderful gold fields, and could guide them to the place. As a consequence the party bought him from his captors, and set out after him across the state of Arizona and up into the headwaters of the Gila.

Three peaks rose from a valley, and between two of them a stream flowed eastward. At the base of the central mountain the placer gold sparkled, and here the party camped and went to work.

Presently their supplies ran low. Half of the party started out for Yuma, not realizing that there were towns across the mountains to the south, to get food and other supplies. A month went by, and no one returned. The provisions were alarmingly low by this time, so three more men started after the first party.

When they reached a mesa top which gave a view of the camp, the three looked back. To their horror, they saw their little settlement in flames, and even as they watched Indians killed the remaining men.

It would mean death to return; besides, their friends were beyond help. Frightened, the three men hurried on, missing their way, and in their wanderings one of them died. At last they reached a town, and here another man, exhausted by that long travel among the mountains, gave up the ghost.

The sole survivor of the party was a man named Adams. He told the story, and added that $1,000 a day could be washed out with a gold pan at the place where his comrades had died. In spite of the horror of his experiences he longed to return to where the golden phantom beckoned.

But it was not to be. Adams tried many times to make his way back to the three mountains, but somehow he could never find them again. Others, too, have hunted for the lost diggings in that fiercely beautiful country, but the secret remains unknown.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

THE HUNTER IS DISAPPOINTED

HOW he knew he was safe, Lightfoot the Deer couldn't have told you. He just knew it, that was all. He couldn't understand a word said by the man in whose yard he found himself when he climbed the bank after his long swim across the Big River. But he didn't have to understand words to know that he had found a friend. So he allowed the man to gently drive him over to an open shed where there was a pile of soft hay, and there he lay down, so tired that it seemed to him he couldn't move another step.

It was only a few minutes later that the hunter who had followed Lightfoot across the river reached the bank and scrambled out of his boat. Lightfoot's friend was waiting just at the top of the bank. Of course the hunter saw him at once.

"Hello, friend!" cried the hunter. "Did you see a deer pass this way a few minutes ago? He swam across the river, and if I know anything about it he's too tired to travel far now. I've been hunting that fellow several days, and if I have any luck at all I ought to get him this time."

"I'm afraid you won't have any luck at all," said Lightfoot's friend. "You see, I don't allow any hunting on my land."

The hunter looked surprised, and then his surprise gave way to anger. "You mean," said he, "that you intend to get that deer yourself?"

Lightfoot's friend shook his head. "No," said he, "I don't mean anything of the kind. I mean that that deer is not to be killed if I can prevent it, and while he is on my land, I think I can. The best thing for you to do, my friend, is to get into your boat and row back where you came from. Are those your hounds barking over there?"

"No," replied the hunter promptly. "I know the law just as well as you do, and it is against the law to hunt deer with dogs. I don't even know who owns those two hounds over there."

"That may be true," replied Lightfoot's friend. "I don't doubt it is true. But you are willing to take advantage of the fact that some one else's dogs have broken the law. You knew that those dogs had driven that deer into the Big River, and you promptly took advantage of the fact to try to reach that deer before he could get across. You are not hunting for the pleasure of hunting but just to kill. You don't know the meaning of justice or fairness. Now get off my land! Get back into your boat and off my land as quickly as you can! That deer is not very far from here and so tired that he cannot move. Just as long as he will stay here, he will be safe, and I hope he will stay until this miserable hunting season is ended. Now go!"

Muttering angrily, the hunter got back into his boat and pushed off. But he didn't row back across the Big River.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

FRUIT SOUPS

COCKTAILS are more popular as a fruit beginner for the dinner than soups, though in Europe the soups are enjoyed by prince and peasant, summer or winter; chilled with shaved ice they make a most nourishing dish. With fruit soups the nourishment depends upon the ingredients used, as with other soups. Prunes, raisins, figs, bananas, persimmons and pawpaws have more food value in themselves, though lacking in other things. With the addition of stock, milk and egg, the food value is increased. Dried or canned fruits are used as well as the fresh fruits.

Strawberry and Orange Soup.

Sprinkle a pint of strawberries with sugar and let stand on ice for one hour. Make a sirup of one and one-half quarts of water and a pound of sugar, cook for ten minutes, add a quart of fresh berries with the juice of one lemon. Mash and strain, adding a cupful of orange juice with the berries, which have been iced. Serve cold.

Apple and Rice Soup.

Core and slice thin eight unpeeled apples. Cook them with one-half cupful of rice until both are soft, using two quarts of boiling water. Put through a sieve, add spices and one-half cupful of orange juice or grapefruit marmalade. Serve hot.

A very appetizing salad may be made by stuffing well plumped and stewed prunes with cream cheese and finely minced celery. Serve on lettuce with a spoonful of french dressing, or any other kind preferred.

Prune and Peach Soup.

Take one-third of a pound of dried prunes and two-thirds of a pound of dried peaches, soak overnight. In the

MAGIC NUMBERS

THIS is a mystic prediction. The magician writes something on a slip of paper which he seals in an envelope. A person is asked to write a number of three figures—all figures different. For instance, 193.

The magician does not see the number. He merely tells the person to reverse it and subtract the smaller from the larger. Example: 193, reversed, is 391. The subtraction leaves 198.

That, too, is kept from the wizard. He says to reverse the result and add. And 198, reversed, is 891. The two, added, produce 1089. The envelope is opened. On the paper is the number 1,089.

Whatever the original number used, the final total will be 1,089. That is the secret of the trick. One point: always mention that a zero must be placed in front if the subtraction brings a two-figure number. Thus, 99 (which sometimes arrives) is treated as 099. Reversed, it is 990.

Knitting Fad in Prehistoric Arctic Circle Settlement

Prehistoric knitting needles, five-teeth combs and spoons of mammoth bone have been found in an ancient settlement near Obdorsk, northern Siberia, by an expedition sent out by the Institute of Anthropology and Ethnography of the Academy of Science of the U. S. S. R. It has excavated 12,000 articles of pottery and bone, some of which are unique.

Besides knitting needles, combs and spoons, they include miniature hoes for tilling fields, pieces of melting pots for metal, and bones of animals and birds which no longer inhabit the Yamal peninsula on which Obdorsk stands. The numerous remains found shows that the peninsula, which is within the Arctic circle, was one densely populated.

ORLAND PARK

A large transport truck was ditched on the Southwest highway near the Keane avenue separation bridge last Thursday when the driver in order to avoid a collision with an auto driven by a woman, turned off the pavement too far, skidded on the ice and went down in the ditch. A state highway department truck and the Zerb's garage wrecker pulled the truck back on the pavement.

The annual stockholders meeting of the Orland State Bank was held Monday morning. The reports showed an increase of business over the previous year and better business conditions. The same officers were re-elected.

Mayor Wm. Kollman visited in Freeport Tuesday.

The Orland Park Legion Post is planning to sponsor a dance in the near future.

The village board meeting held Monday night was a very quiet one only routine business being transacted. The village board is still undecided whether to call a special village election this spring to elect a trustee to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of Harold Kinney. There will be no general election this year.

Miss Lois Ludwig is still confined to a hospital in Freeport where she has been a patient since an auto accident the day before Christmas. She is improving quite nicely according to latest reports.

Stanley Yunker recently shot a fox.

Miss Ellen Hansen of Westmont arrived here Sunday and is coaching the play: "The Blue Bonnet" which the Orland Park P.T.A. will sponsor at the Orland Park Public school auditorium on January 23rd and 24th.

MEMBERS OF RUST FAMILY

MEN THAT I HAVE SEEN IN PUBLIC LIFE

By Charles L. Sylvester

Roosevelt is the name most in the minds of the American people just now so I will commence on Teddy.

The old Metropolitan Athletic club while composed of men of wealth, anyone could go in there if they would not make wise-cracks about the members. One Monday morning a small young man came in, he wanted to put on the gloves with some one, but as he weighed only about 116 lbs., everyone was too heavy for him. I asked who he was. They said he was young Teddy Roosevelt. The next time he came before my ken was in the campaign for mayor of New York in 1886. All we old-timers remember that Henry George ran as an independent, and Ab. Hewitt ran on the Tammany ticket. Young Teddy ran on the Republican ticket and got the least votes of the three. By this time he had grown stout. Later he became secretary of the navy under Harrison.

At this time he was appointed Police Commissioner of New York by Mayor Strong. He created the reign of terror. The first thing he did was to discharge William Byrns of the detective department and appointed a young lieutenant without experience. Crooks from Chicago and other cities came back home to rob and profit. One of the crimes committed and never solved was the "Bishop's Butler" murder.

The second man in public life brought to my memory is a Republican of the old school. I refer to the late Senator Roscoe Cocklin. He was nicknamed the "Turkey Gobbler", he felt his importance and he had a right to. He, like many other great men of our country, became the victim of inferiors. Senator Bill Robertson or President James A. Garfield were not the equal of Senator Cocklin. I met him at the Metropolitan Athletic club where nearly every Monday morning the Senator could be found with the gloves on and there was none better. The club's boxing tutor was Jem Mace, retired heavyweight champion of the world. One of the cleanest among the members of the club were George Gould and his brothers Edward and Howard. The latter was no mixer. He held himself aloof from all except those members who had money. All the Goulds were good with the gloves; George was equal to any of the professionals.

I can't close this article without paying a tribute to my old friend State Senator John Morresey. At the Edwards - Chambers heavyweight prize fight, February 13, 1879, I sat on the left of Fatty Walsh. He had just joined the fat men's club. Another heavy set man sat on my left; it was State Senator John Morresey, one of the best friends I ever had. Imagine a little shrimp sitting between two men whose total weight was around 750 lbs., perched on a snow-bank.

Enough to say, that my man Edwards lost.

News Flashes From Springfield

By Bernice T. Van Der Vries

Among the two dozen of us Republican and Democratic members of the Senate and the House who were called to a conference in the Governor's office last Tuesday afternoon, there was not one, whether friend or foe, who envied Governor Horner.

Faced with the knowledge that all relief stations in Illinois would be closed on January 15th unless funds were provided by the State, the Governor and the members of the Assembly realized the seriousness of the situation and quickly agreed that a special session must be called. The Governor had practically abandoned hope that help would arrive from Washington either in money or jobs. A two hour discussion took place on the method of financing relief. The Relief Commission represented by John C. Martin, the chairman, and Leo Lyons, the new executive director who has replaced Wilfred Reynolds, argued that about $5,000,000 a month would be necessary until May first.

Entering into the picture of the situation was the fact that there were still in Illinois about 50,000 considered as employables who had not been taken from the relief rolls and placed on WPA as had been promised would be done by January 1st when the Federal Government set up the Works Progress Administration.

It is expected that the Old Age Assistance will take many off the relief rolls. The conservative members of Assembly predict that due to the fact that the administrative details have not yet been passed by the Assembly, it will be several months before the payments of the pension will start. House Bill No. 32 which provides for the administration of old age assistance, aid to dependent children and assistance to the blind and crippled passed the Senate Wednesday morning. It must return to the House for concurrence in amendments attached to the bill by the Senate. The bill is far from satisfactory to the Social Welfare groups, as there is no provision for the selection of county superintendents from the names certified by the Civil Service Commission.

Finally at the Governor's conference after the matter of bond issues had been discussed, it was decided that an appropriation bill of $2,500,000 should be introduced immediately upon the convening of the Second Special Session and that between then and February first the Assembly must decide upon a future program.

The $2,500,000 will be taken from the General Fund in which there is some $17,000,000. Practically all of this amount has been allocated. It is estimated $9,000,000 will be needed for Old Age Assistance and the remainder was designated for new buildings and extensive repairs at the state institutions.

It is generally known that some of the institutions, particularly in the charitable group, need repairs and new buildings because of age and overcrowding, but the conference decided that food for the hungry was more essential.

The proclamation of the Governor was prepared and delivered to the members on Wednesday morning. At four o'clock in the afternoon, the Second Special Session convened with its business limited (1) to enact laws and to amend or repeal any existing laws in relation to the relief of persons who are destitute and in necessitous circumstances; (2) to make appropriations for the payment of the expenses of this extraordinary session of the Fifty-Ninth General Assembly.

The second session will run concurrently with the First Special session. I am told that considerable confusion exists in this method of enacting legislation.

Several appropriation bills were introduced besides the one agreed upon in the conference. Representative Lewis introduced a bill for $2,000,000 to be apportioned on the basis of past expenditures between Cook County and Down State. This when added to the $2,000,000 provided for relief by the Sales Tax would have to be supplemented by the counties and townships.

Senator Ward of Chicago introduced in the Senate a $10,000,000 appropriation bill which would take care of relief until May first.

Bills abolishing the Illinois Emergency Relief Commission were introduced by Representatives Richard J. Lyons and Lottie Holman O'Neill, the two most bitter opponents of the Commission in the House. These bills as well as the appropriation bills were advanced to second reading, and are due for passage Monday night or Tuesday.

On Tuesday night the Unemployment bill was called in the Senate. Only six votes were cast for the measure, while fifteen negative votes were recorded. The remainder of the fifty-one members were silent.

The Driver's License Bill remains on third reading in the House. When I asked Majority Floor Leader Adamowski when it would be called, his reply was "You know the Speaker's opposition as well as I." Speaker Devine's opposition evidently prevents the calling of the bill as it did in the regular session.

Once again, as a year ago at this time, the question of relief is most serious. An appropriation sufficient for two weeks or even four months far from solves the problem.

THE OPPOSITION EXPOSED

The law that was enacted in 1924 giving to World War veterans an adjusted service certificate, negotiable for cash in 1945, has a most unusual and interesting background. Few of our people including veterans, are familiar with the circumstances that gave birth to this "tombstone" bonus idea in the years that followed shortly after the Armistice was signed.

Money cannot buy patriotism. No man would sell the sight of his eyes nor the use of his legs for $1.00 a day. The rank and file of veterans, as a matter of fact, never even asked the federal government for a pay adjustment. The idea originated within Congress itself. In 1917, in the stress and emergency of America's entrance into the World War, the subject of soldier's pay was hotly debated in Congress. A wage of $1.00 a day for the men who were to bear the greatest brunt of the war was conceded to be ridiculously inadequate. But time was short, the need was great, hundreds of pressing problems demanded immediate consideration. No one knew how long the war would last nor how much it would cost. It was decided to pay the soldiers $1.00 a day with the distinct understanding that Uncle Sam would be most generous to veterans after the war was over in his plans for their rehabilitation.

After peace was declared, and our armed forces of approximately four and one-half million men were demobilized, the thought suddenly occurred to those who pay large income taxes that the aftermath of every war always brings with it a demand for pensions. Although these individuals did not hesitate to advocate the spending of millions of dollars per day, when the war was in progress, and the future safety of their riches was in danger, the dawn of peace brought to mind the pension problems that this nation has had to deal with in the past as a result of the Civil and Spanish-American Wars. They were terrified by the thought that the government would eventually have to pay similar pensions to more than four million World War veterans, plus their widows and dependents. They knew that taxes would have to be increased if the federal government was ever to be called upon to face a pension problem of such staggering proportions.

However, those who were worried about a demand for World War pensions in the future conceived a cunning scheme. Instead of cash, they would give to each veteran an adjusted service certificate, or a promissory note that would fall due twenty years later in 1945. They were shrewd enough to figure that by 1945 the average World War veteran would be fifty years old. At that age, the rank and file of America's service men would be in need of financial aid in the form of government pensions. Those who conceived the Adjusted Service Certificate idea realized that such a demand for pensions would be greatly weakened in 1945 if each veteran would have the equivalent of $1,000.00 actually in hand. With each veteran receiving approximately $1000.00 from this certificate, those who promoted this scheme predicted that a campaign for World War pensions in 1945 would meet with little public sympathy.

Unfortunately, their plans were upset by the depression. The fight that was waged by the Veterans of Foreign Wars in 1924 against this proposed "tombstone" method of payment, was given new strength when unemployment became widespread. The demand for immediate cash settlement became increasingly popular. Members of Congress took up the fight for the V. F. W. and in 1931, the veterans gained a partial victory. A law was enacted authorizing the veteran to borrow on his certificate from the federal government to the extent of 50 percent of the face value. The V. F. W. gained this objective virtually single handed but even then they refused to quit. In 1933, 1934 and 1935 we again appeared before Congress and succeeded in forcing favorable action and our efforts were only defeated thru White House vetoes.

Today we are at the climax of ten long years of consistent campaign for this cash adjustment of the obligation to the veteran.

The Veteran of Foreign Wars, in demanding of the national Congress the immediate cash payment of World War veteran's adjusted certificates, are offering an ideal substitute for relief.

In the state of Illinois alone, the payment of this debt will divide the sum of $141,472,289.16 among 253,343 World War veterans.

Public Service

Extending Rural Electrical Lines

A review of 1935 rural development in Illinois shows that the Illinois Commerce Commission has granted numerous certificates of convenience and necessity covering farm line extensions to the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois. Throughout its territory the Public Service Company has been energetically extending its system to make the benefits of electricity available to additional hundreds of farms.

At the beginning of 1935, the Company served 10,538 rural customers with electricity. Now, 1100 more farms and rural customers are enjoying the conveniences of electric light and power from lines previously available or from new ones constructed during the year. In the last 12 months, 209 miles of rural lines were built, continuing the forward-looking program of the Public Service Company which the Public Service Company has pursued for many years.

Thus farmers who have not, for one reason or another, before been able to take advantage of the opportunity to have electricity work for them on their own farms, will in many cases be able to do so now, without expending money for the extension of lines along the highway to their gate. Today service is available to 13,458 farms and rural homes in the Company's territory.

While the most ambitious estimates call for the electrification of 50 per cent of all rural homes — farm and non-farm — in the United States within the next ten years, the Public Service Company with 2682 miles of rural lines is already serving 11,650 rural customers, and has facilities already provided for serving over 45 per cent of all farms and rural homes in its territory.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

The Lord's Shock Troops

WESTWOOD, HILLS, CAL.

—In peace: I knew streets in New York where citizens went at their own risk, and policemen walked in pairs. But some were as safe as though they'd been in church—a doctor with his kit; a nurse in her uniform; a priest or a nun; a preacher or a rabbi, and always a Salvation Army worker.

In war: Ask any veteran what organization, no matter how big its personnel, or how fat its purse, outdid the Salvation Army in service to our soldiers, whatsoever the race or the creed or the color.

At Christmas: Who sent Santa down cold chimneys to gladden the hearts of children at hearthstones that otherwise would be desolate? Who brought a measure of holiday cheer to the misery-laden, putting clothes on the backs and dinners in the stomachs of the naked and the hungry?

So, for their eleventh-hour drive for their Christmas fund, thank God for the Salvation Army. Every cent went where it should have gone when you gave it to them, for verily I tell you, as one who knows, these are the shock troops of the Lord.

That Marvelous Hen

WHATEVER became of the hen which from time to time hauled off and laid an egg with mysterious initialing on it? In my days on a country newspaper this gifted fowl was a regular journalistic feature. Her output might be soft-shelled and shy a yolk, but always the cryptic writing was there.

Once she produced an egg bearing letters which many translated as prophesying "war." But somebody pointed out that if you read the message the other way it spelt "raw," which also seemed to cover the case.

This barnyard phenomenon died too soon. How the New Deal boys could use a hen capable of turning out weird alphabetical combinations and then going off and forgetting them!

Afterthought—Among all the office seekers or office holders who have been or may be mentioned for a Presidential nomination next year—or even for Vice President—you will search in vain for the name of Governor Hoffman of New Jersey.

Destroying a Skunk

I'VE just been reading—until I stopped to gag—the latest novel of one of the new school of authors; you know, those so-called realists who mistake filth for fiction and lewdness for literature. I wouldn't say this person was much of a writer, but he certainly is a practical dirt-farmer.

I've never believed in censorship for creative work; and as regards this group, I've always gone on the theory, paraphrasing an old line of an old ballad, that they were more to be pitied than censored.

But for the individual offender against common decency—well, when I was a youngster down South, they told me the surest way to destroy a skunk was to pen him under a barrel and just let him smell himself to death on his own personal perfumes.

What Does America Ask of Congress?

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

With the new year comes a new session of Congress. What does the average American ask of it?

Basically his demands are modest—and few. All are in conformity with the rights and powers granted him under the Constitution.

He wants those rights respected and preserved.

He wants his collective interests, as a worker, an earner and a taxpayer, considered above and ahead of the demands of organized minorities operating as political pressure groups.

He wants his national Legislators to exhibit those qualities of responsibility and self-reliance expected of the chosen representatives of a free people. He has seen enough of rubber-stamp Congresses, eager and willing to enact hasty measures at the behest of appointed bureau chiefs, in whose selection the voters have no choice and over whose actions they exercise no control.

He wants Congress to know and respect the Federal Constitution—to refrain from legislation which violates our Fundamental Law and the Bill of Rights.

He wants Congress to remember that public debts created by reckless expenditures and waste must be paid out of taxes—clipped from the worker's earnings or the earnings of his children and grandchildren. He wants it to stop mortgaging our future.

He wants members of Congress, whatever their party affiliations, to think of the Nation as a whole, rather than in terms of political groups and factions.

At the annual meeting of the voting members of the Zion Lutheran church held the past week church officers were elected and committees appointed for the ensuing year.

A group of friends of Walter Mancke, local barber who is a patient in the Ingall's Memorial hospital in Harvey, called on him Wednesday night.

The Tinley Park PTA held their regular meeting last Friday afternoon.

Friends of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Mager recently surprised them in honor of their silver wedding anniversary. Mr. Mager was formerly village clerk of Tinley Park.

The weekly bunco parties being held at the Studio Bazaar are drawing good attendances. The one held Wednesday of this week was attended by 16 players.

The Bell Telephone Company has been adding more equipment to their fast growing local exchange which is located upstairs over the J. C. Funk store. The heavy equipment has caused the ceiling in the Funk store to sag. New iron I beams and iron posts have been installed in the Funk store to prevent the further sagging of the ceiling.

The American Legion Auxiliary will sponsor a card and bunco party at the Legion Hall on January 30, commencing at 8 p. m. Refreshments will be served.

Henry Bettenhausen, our genial hardware man who has been laid up following an accident before Christmas, has been able to be out this week and was at his store for a few hours.

Mrs. Garster is the new assistant postmaster at the Tinley Park post office.

George Price who has been laid up for several weeks is able to be out again. He has been off his job as flagman at New Lenox for several weeks.

Rev. Paul Hastings is the new pastor of the Tinley Park English M. E. church.

A new heating plant has been installed in the Henry Boldt dwelling. The plant was installed by the Bettenhausen Hardware Co., Adolph Ceithaml assisted in the work.

A group of friends recently held a Twelfth night party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. August Mesenbrink.

Fred Hick who recently was hurt when he fell on an icy sidewalk is able to be about again.

Mrs. Frances Ceithaml underwent an appendicitis operation in the St. Francis hospital in Blue Island Tuesday.

Work on the new steel house in the south Elmore subdivision is steadily going on and it is hoped the building will be completed sometime in February.

Hello Folks! Boy o' Boy did the TYO basketball teams have the pep Tuesday night at the New Lenox gym. They snowed New Lenox under in three games by overwhelming scores. The girls triumphed by a 14 to 8 score; the Lights came through with a 33 to 7 win and the Heavies followed with a 47 to 25 score.

Come out and see the victorious TYO teams play at the gym tonight. The girls will play the Blue Island Brownies, and the boys the Lemont Tigers. Don't forget game time is 7:45.

Well enough of that. Now for some real dirt.

Why We Need a National Umpire

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

As happened after the crash of the Blue Eagle, the recent decision invalidating A. A. A. has aroused various proposals for a change in our American form of government.

A typical suggestion is that we withdraw from the Supreme Court some or all of its authority to hold elected officials to the course mapped out for them in the Federal Constitution, and thereby extend to Congress the power to steer our ship of state among whatever shoals or channels may strike its fancy.

There is nothing either new or impossible about such proposals. They can be translated into reality by the mere adoption of any one of several amendments now pending in Washington. Let the American people agree to relinquish to Congress certain rights granted them by the Constitution and preserved by the Supreme Court—and the thing is accomplished.

That's what advocates of those amendments are asking us to do.

But, simple as this idea can be made to sound, it remains a serious and dangerous proposal. It strikes at the very root of accepted American principles in government. Before we consider any such course let's pause to remind ourselves of several facts of our past and current history. Let's recall, for example:

That alone, among the greater nations of earth, our country has retained its form of government unchanged during the past century.

That much of the permanence and success of its government has been attributed to the system of checks and balances between executive, judicial and legislative branches, and between the states and Washington. It is based on the principle that the right of the people and the states to govern themselves shall not be usurped by central authority.

That under our form of government America has enjoyed a larger share of happiness and prosperity than any other nation.

That none of the nations which in recent years have shifted to the newer forms now popular in Europe have achieved anything that can be envied by the American people.

And finally:

That whatever passing benefits various odd experiments may offer a favored few, they do not hold the solution of our problems. Despite the alluring phrases of economic crooners, America still subscribes to the essential truth and wisdom expressed by George Washington when he said:

"Nothing but harmony, honesty, industry and frugality are necessary to make us a great and happy people."

Nobleman Served America

Claude Henri, Count de Saint-Simon, the founder of French socialism, served as a volunteer in the American Revolution. His noble birth prevented his taking an active part in the French revolution, which he favored.

Even after this, Garth had to bear the brunt of the heavy work. Much of the time the others were forced to stop off, to get the camp out of their knees or rest their arms. And when they paddled, their unskillful stroke kept Garth twisting his own stroke to keep the canoe from being swerved from side to side like a ship with the yards.

Had work been the only consideration, he would as soon have done it all. There were, however, reasons for more speed than he could make alone with the heavily loaded skin-covered craft. The summer was now far along. The days were rapidly shortening, the nights becoming colder and darker.

Delay would mean a serious chance of being caught in early autumn blizzards. Even Lilith Ramill might not be able to survive an all-day drive of sleet. Such a storm would undoubtedly kill her father and, not improbably, Huxby also. Persistent use of the paddles would continue the toughening of the three chechacos. It would also quicken the speed of the canoe as they acquired skill from practice.

He himself kept to his stroke like the born voyager he was, dipping his paddle for hour after hour. His steady pull never varied except when, at long intervals, he shifted the paddle over to the other side. He stopped that clocklike stroke only when landings had to be made for food or sleep.

On the third day Lilith attempted to keep stroke with him. She paddled until so exhausted that she broke down and wept. After that Huxby quit less often, though he never came so near to overtiring himself.

They had twice camped on muskeg. The third afternoon brought them to broken ridges where the stream dashed through a gorge. So far as could be seen, the rapids looked easy to shoot. But Garth said it was a portage.

He slung a pack from his tump-line and took the canoe on his shoulders. The total load was a full two hundred and fifty pounds. At sight of it, the others took on all the rest of the meat and equipment. For miles Garth led them up and down rocky slopes, through brush and bogs. Twice they skirted sheer falls that showed why he had taken to land.

At last, below the lower fall, he launched the canoe in the eddy of a deep pool. The others sank down on the bank, outspent. He built a fire and boiled tea for them. They expected to camp overnight. He ordered them back into the canoe.

"Can't chance waiting here. May be too foggy to see tomorrow," he explained. "Sit flat in the bottom, and keep your paddles inboard."

They understood when a few strokes of his paddle brought the canoe to the foot of the pool. For a long two miles they crouched low in the bottom while the frail craft glided down the foaming, swirling torrent of white water. Garth smiled at their cowering backs. He had often shot worse rapids, and he had been down there once before. Skillfully as an Athabaskan Indian, he drove the canoe clear of dangerous whirlpools and dodged past rocks with deft twists of his paddle.

At the foot of the rapids, he headed in alongside a bit of gravelly beach and helped Mr. Ramill and Lilith ashore. When he remarked that there was gold in the gravel, Huxby nearly upset the canoe in his haste to get out and look.

"Gold! Why didn't we bring the gold pan?"

Garth laughed and stretched out on the dry grass above the gravel. "Gallant gentleman, your lady is building the fire."

"Don't mind him, Vivian," Lilith chimed in on the banter. "You can use the cup for panning. I need only the pot to boil Alan's tea."

Huxby glanced sidelong at Garth and hastened to help the girl. Her father had flattened out beside Garth. With a yawn, Garth stretched up his arms and let them fall. The left one came down across the millionaire's body. The back of the hand felt a lump under the leather coat. Huxby had not again gained possession of the pistol.

Nothing would have been easier than to have pulled out the weapon and flung it into the stream. The impulse to do so passed as quickly as it flashed into Garth's mind. He was not the kind of sportsman who shoots lions from a boma, or tigers from the backs of elephants. There is far more sport stalking a beast that has a chance to kill the stalker.

The chechacos had now experienced the different phases of canoeing—days of paddling through muskeg, a portage, and the running of rapids. But all proved to be no more than a mild sample of the difficulties and hardships that followed. In the next two weeks three more rapids had to be shot and two very hard portages made. Between times, the canoe was paddled interminably through meandering channels that twisted and looped and split off in blind leads.

Down in the lower country, the pests of black gnats, mosquitoes and stinging flies became worse. At the same time the flask of grease and pitch dope began to give out. Most of the camps were on wet ground. For days the party were drenched by a steady drizzle, varied only by downpours that kept Lilith and her father bailing the canoe.

Several times fog on the water compelled Garth to put ashore. Without sight, even his training could not enable him to follow the right channel. He was not an Indian. But between the forced halts, he put in still longer hours of paddling.

Matters were coming to a pinch. After the first wetting by the rain, what remained of the meat spoiled. It became so flyblown and tainted that Lilith threw it away before Garth could prevent the wastage. He decided to give them all another lesson.

In the fast that followed, Mr. Ramill was the first to fail. Huxby came next; Lilith last of the three. By the third day they had given up all paddling. On the fourth, they lay slumped in the bottom of the canoe. Garth only tightened his belt again and dipped his paddle in his strong, steady, seemingly tireless stroke.

Whenever he found himself nearing his limit, he headed ashore, boiled tea, slept, and then put off again. The fifth day began to draw on the last reserve of his wiry endurance. Towards noon he made the boggy shore, almost outspent. He dragged out the wolfskin knapsack anchor, with its load of platinum alloy. The girl and the two men lay in a stupor of starvation. He himself was so tired that he could not have lifted even Lilith ashore.

As he rested on the west sedges he recalled the place as one of his former camp sites. A spruce-covered ridge of higher ground here thrust out into the muskeg. The first remembrance brought another. The second gave him strength to pull his rifle from the canoe and climb aslant the ridge end. There was a berry patch on the east slope. The fruit would be better than nothing. He hoped, however, for something more.

Circling to get the wind in his face, he crept through the spruce thickets until he could peer out on the open ground of the berry patch. Luck was with him. The old black bear had gone off and left her cub. He rested the rifle barrel on a spruce branch to get a sure aim.

"Out of the Muskegs; but a Long Way From Out of This D—d North!"

That was the end of famine. Gorged upon the fat, tender meat of the bear cub, even Mr. Ramill rapidly regained strength. He was still rather weak, however, when they came to the last portage.

The approach to solid ground was across a narrow belt of muskeg. Near the far side of the swamp, the millionaire failed to jump squarely upon a tussock of niggerhead grass. He slipped and plunged headfirst into a pool.

Huxby was following close behind, alert for every move of his partner. He sprang to grasp the feet of the sinking man. A heave dragged him out, slimed and spluttering. Huxby worked over him, scraping off mud, until Lilith hastened back to help assist her father across the rest of the quagmire. Once on firm ground, the millionaire joked about his mishap.

"Haven't had a bath since the last rain," he said. "This one is higher class—equal to the mud baths at Hot Springs. How about my pack Lilith?" She looked in his foxskin bag. "Everything there, Dad—with some mud added."

Garth had been too far ahead, with his heavy pack and canoe, to see or hear the accident. Mr. Ramill joked again about his extra bath when they took to the canoe at the far side of the portage. But all the time until they reached the evening camp and he started to wash the mud from the leather coat, he did not notice that the pistol was missing.

At the announcement of the loss,

Huxby met Garth's gaze with a stare of cold hostility. Garth walked up to him, empty-handed.

"If you've done what I think you have," he said, "I call you for a showdown."

The engineer's lips tightened in an ironical smile. He put up his hands. Not to be fooled by the seeming bluff, Garth went over Huxby's tattered clothes, from coat collar to moccasins. The pistol was nowhere on the engineer.

"This is one time I'm due to apologize," Garth admitted. "I accept no apology from you," Huxby replied.

Lilith looked from one to the other, her own lips tightening. Mr. Ramill good-humoredly interposed, as he hung the washed leather coat before the fire: "Postpone your fight, boys. We're still in the muskegs. I'll built a cockpit for you when we get out."

That won a chuckle from Garth. Huxby smiled with his lips—not with his eyes. As Lilith looked from Garth to him, her eyes narrowed and her lips tightened.

CHAPTER VII

The Gaffed Wolf.

Mr. Ramill's good-humor over his fall into the muskeg pool had not been forced. It was based upon his feeling of physical well-being.

Instead of having been broken down by the hard toil and exposure of the trip and that severe lesson in the meaning of famine, he had come through it all in even better shape than before the start from the lost valley. The days of starvation had completed Nature's raid upon the degenerate fats and poisons of his once obese body.

There had followed the feasts of tender bear-cub meat. He was again putting on weight, but it was hard muscle. The healthy blood flooded his brain with a comfortable glow that was not to be dampened by any amount of toil or discomforts.

He was paddling as vigorously if not as skillfully as his daughter, when, mid-morning of the twenty-fourth day from the valley, the canoe neared a wooded point that rose well above the swamps. Garth called out from the stern of the canoe:

"If you want a surprise, friends, shut your eyes while we take ten strokes."

He knew that Huxby would keep on staring ahead. But he guessed right about Lilith and her father. At the end of the tenth stroke, the girl flung up her paddle and uttered a shriek of joyous amazement:

"The river! The river!" Close upon the cry came the deep-lunged shout of her father: "By the Almighty, you've done it, Garth! We're out."

Huxby continued to stare fixedly ahead at the mighty flood of the Mackenzie. He was last to speak: "Out of the muskegs; but a long way from out of this d—d North!"

"Long by canoe or even by steamer," Garth agreed. "Not so far, though, by air passage. We can make the emergency supply post by two or three hours' paddling downstream."

"What of it? That fellow Tobin told us planes never stop there, unless foul weather runs them short of gas."

Garth met the suddenly anxious looks of Lilith and her father with a smile.

"All pilots have orders to sight non-stop posts in passing. Tobin has a distress signal. There'll be a plane coming south from the Arctic coast within three days—probably tomorrow. You'll be lying in the lap of luxury at Edmonton within a week or ten days."

The millionaire felt at the grease-and-pitch mat of his month-old beard. He chuckled. "A bath and a barber! Hand over that last cigar, Garth. Here's where I celebrate."

He opened the gold-mounted case, bit off the tip of the sole surviving Havana, and snapped his patent lighter. It failed to flair. He tossed it over into the water, and turned to Garth, with an impatient command: "Give me a light."

"Only two matches left, sir." "Enough to light a cigar. Pass them over."

Instead of taking out his waterproof match case, Garth took up his paddle. "The rule is, never burn your last match until you have to. You've thrown away that little flint and steel. The fire-drill is all right in dry weather but hard to use in wet."

Huxby dipped his own paddle. "Come on, Mr. Ramill. By his own account, three hours more will rid us of him and his insolence."

"Wait," said Lilith. She pointed to the bank where the pleasant green of young spruces showed among the weathered white trunks of fire-killed birch trees. "If we have so much time, we'll land there and clean up."

"But—with the post so near, my dear Lilith!" Huxby protested. "That fellow Tobin had any amount of soap."

"All the more reason. I'll not have even a common navy see me in this condition. The rags can't be helped. But the dirt!" Out burst her suppressed loathing for all the grease and grime that smirched herself and the men. "Mud! slime! rancid fat! spoiled meat! Alan Garth, I know that I have to go in dressed like a squaw. But this—this filth!"

He surged the canoe around shoreward with a powerful sweep of his paddle.

"Not necessary, Miss Ramill. A scouring with hardwood ashes and sand will do the work of soap. We can go in sweet."

They landed where an ice jam of some spring break-up had gouged through the muskeg mud at the end of the ridge and left a clear beach of glacial sand and gravel. Up over the ten-foot cut bank, Garth started a fire with one of his two remaining matches.

Even Huxby joined in gathering other piles of fallen birch branches for more fires. While they were burning, Garth beached the canoe and tilted it so that the sun would dry the soggy inside. Huxby stirred the fires, and Mr. Ramill broiled the last of the partly spoiled bear-cub meat, while Lilith tried out a cupful of the rancid fat for a final mess of mosquito dope. Garth brought the girl pitch for the mix from the nearby thicket of young spruces.

No cleaning could be done until the fires burned out. When Mr. Ramill took off the spits of cooked meat, all squatted down as usual to share the meal. Garth smiled his thanks as he took the slab of hot meat handed to him by the millionaire. The smile hardened.

A sudden change had fallen upon his three companions. He could easily guess the cause. They realized that this was the last meal they were to share as fellow voyageurs with him.

The moment they stepped from the canoe onto the wharf at the emergency refueling post, their forced companionship with him in the lost valley and on all the long trip out would be at an end. Instead of a trio dependent upon their opponent for food and guidance—for life itself—they would be a trio not only independent of, but hostile to him and his interests.

That was at least true of the two men. And even Lilith betrayed in her look and manner a vivid consciousness of the impending change of relationship. As for Huxby, the cold gloating in his stare showed how he was anticipating the robbery and ruin of the man who had so far outplayed him.

Coronation of New King or Queen Is Great Event

A great thing to see in London is the crowning of a new king or queen. It does not happen often, but when it does it is an event to remember, says a writer in the Detroit News.

The actual crowning, or coronation, takes place in Westminster abbey and the archbishop of Canterbury is in charge of the ceremony. The new king sits in the famous Coronation chair, which is covered for the event with cloth-of-gold. He promises that he will govern by the laws made by the British parliament; that he will carry out a rule of justice and mercy; and that he will maintain the Protestant religion.

The Coronation chair dates back to the time of King Edward I, who ruled six and a half centuries ago. It is made of oak, but under the seat is "the Stone of Scone," which was taken away from Scotland during the reign of Edward. Before that the stone had been used during the crowning of Scottish kings.

There is a legend that the Stone of Scone was used as a "pillow" by Jacob, the Hebrew patriarch. The legend says that the stone was moved from Palestine to Ireland, and from there to Scotland before it fell into the hands of the English. There is reason to believe, however, that it was obtained from a quarry near Scone, a town in Scotland.

Underground Schools

Unlike Britain, where schools are built so as to admit as much fresh air and sunlight as possible, the Lapps burrow under the earth. Only the thatch or tiled roofs of their schools can be seen. The rest is all cellar. Sunlight does not matter, because for at least six months of the year it is perpetually dark, while for only three months does the sun shine continuously. Fresh air in the form of cutting blasts is most unwelcome, and in winter, spring, and autumn everything is done to keep it out. The atmosphere in Lapp schools, with every crevice blocked and heating apparatus full on, is more than English lungs could bear, but the people there are used to it.

Seneca Root

Seneca root or seneca snakeroot is a plant of the milkwort family known to botanists as Polygala senega and found growing mostly in rocky woods and on eroding hillsides. It is a smooth perennial plant with a short rootstock as thick as a lead pencil and rather thick roots. The roots and rootstocks have medicinal value.

Lesson for January 19

JESUS PREPARES FOR HIS WORK

LESSON TEXT—Luke 3:21, 22; 4:1-13.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.—Luke 4:8.
PRIMARY TOPIC—When Jesus Grew Up.

JUNIOR TOPIC—When Jesus was Tempted.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Making a Right Start for Life.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Finding God's Way for Life.

The statement of the subject of this lesson is not quite satisfactory. His baptism and temptation were not means of preparation, but were respectively his formal entrance upon his work and the first conflict with the devil, whose works he came to destroy.

1. Jesus Entering Upon His Mediatorial Work (Luke 3:21, 22).

1. His baptism (v. 21). In his baptism we see the symbolic act of Jesus dedicating himself to the work of redemption through the cross, or the act of consecration on his part to the work of saving the world through his death and resurrection. His baptism did not mean his obedience to the law of God, but his entrance upon the sacrificial work which on the cross of Calvary made a real foundation for full righteousness.

2. His anointing (v. 22). As he thus dedicated himself to the task of bringing in a righteousness, he was anointed with the Holy Spirit.

3. The heavenly recognition (v. 22). This act of devotion to the divine will was attended by the declaration of divine approval. "Thou art my beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased."

II. Jesus' First Conflict With the Devil (Luke 4:1-13).

Jesus went from the place of anointing and heavenly recognition as the Son of God to meet and to spoil the arch enemy (Heb. 2:14). Instead of the temptation, therefore, being a preparation for his messianic work, it was a demonstration of the inseparableness of the divine and human natures in the incarnation. It is to be noted that the Holy Spirit, not Satan, led Jesus into the wilderness to be tempted.

1. The place (v. 1). It was in the wilderness of Judea. The first man, Adam, was tempted in a garden, with the most pleasant surroundings. The second man, Jesus Christ, was tempted in a barren wilderness, surrounded by wild beasts (Mark 1:13).

2. The method (vv. 2-12). Christ as the world's Redeemer sustained a threefold relationship: the Son of man, the Messiah, and the Son of God. Therefore, Satan made each one a ground of attack.

a. As Son of man (vv. 2-4). Satan made his first assault upon Jesus as a man by appealing to the instinct of hunger. Satan urged him to use his divine power to convert a stone into bread. Hunger is natural and sinless. Real human life experiences hunger. The appetite of hunger was normal and right. The temptation was to satisfy a right hunger in a wrong way. To have yielded in this case, though his hunger was desperate, would have been to renounce the human limitations which he had taken for our sins. To use divine power to satisfy human needs would have been to fail as Savior and Mediator. To do right in a wrong way is to fail.

b. As Messiah (vv. 5-8). Here the temptation was to grasp his rightful dominion by false means. The devil offered to surrender unto him the world, if he would adopt his method—worship him. The force of this temptation was in the fact that the kingdoms of the world are Christ's by God's covenant with him. God's method by which Jesus was to possess the world was the sacrificial death on the cross. The temptation which Satan is placing upon the church today is to get possession of the world by other means than that of the cross.

c. As Son of God (vv. 9-12). Here Satan tries to induce Christ to presume upon God's care. He quotes a messianic psalm to induce him so to act. To do the spectacular thing in order to get publicity is to fall into Satan's temptation. For Jesus to have placed himself in danger in order to get God's special help in delivering him would have been to sin. To test God as to whether he will keep a promise is the greatest distrust; it is to sin and fail.

d. Christ's defense (vv. 4, 8, 12). It was the Word of God. He met every onslaught of the enemy with "It is written." Our defense is God's Word. May every Sunday School teacher and believer know how to use it.

e. The issue (v. 13). Satan was vanquished. If we but trust God and use his Word, we too can overcome the devil.

Burdens

Bear your burden manfully. Boys at school, young men who have exchanged boyish liberty for serious business—all who have got a task to do, a work to finish—bear the burden till God gives the signal for repose—the work is done, and the holiday is fairly earned.

The Best Way

Choose always the way that seems the best, however rough it may be. Custom will render it easy and agreeable.—Pythagoras.

OF INTEREST TO THE HOUSEWIFE

When an apple pie is two-thirds baked, sprinkle grated cheese over the top. It adds much to the flavor of the pie.

To cut marshmallows easily dip a dry scissors used for cutting into powdered sugar.

If apples are pricked with a fork before putting into the oven to bake, skins will not crack open in baking.

Sprinkle the buds and leaves of tulips, hyacinths, etc., grown in the house. It prevents their shriveling.

Place a turkey or chicken with breast down in pan for the first half hour of roasting. Juices will then flow into the breast and meat will be much more tender.

Clinkers that form on the stove lining will soon disappear if four or five oyster shells are burned on red hot coals that are left after fire has been shaken down.

A soft cloth moistened with kerosene instead of water will clean windows quickly and well in freezing weather.

Give house plants a little fresh air every day. They require air as well as water and sunshine.

Sugar, used wisely, is an important source of energy to the body.

The Man Who Knows

Whether the Remedy You are taking for Headaches, Neuralgia or Rheumatism Pains is SAFE is Your Doctor. Ask Him

Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's Well-Being to Unknown Preparations

BEFORE you take any preparation you don't know all about, for the relief of headaches; or the pains of rheumatism, neuritis or neuralgia, ask your doctor what he thinks about it—in comparison with Genuine Bayer Aspirin.

We say this because, before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin, most so-called "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as being bad for the stomach; or, often, for the heart. And the discovery of Bayer Aspirin largely changed medical practice.

Countless thousands of people who have taken Bayer Aspirin year in and out without ill effect, have proved that the medical findings about its safety were correct.

Remember this: Genuine Bayer Aspirin is rated among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and all common pains . . . and safe for the average person to take regularly.

You can get real Bayer Aspirin at any drug store—simply by never asking for it by the name "aspirin" alone, but always saying BAYER ASPIRIN when you buy.

STOPS DANDRUFF

You need a medicine to really end Dandruff and the itching it causes. So stop experimenting. Use Glover's Mange Medicine and shampoo with Glover's Medicated Soap regularly. Start today! At all drug stores.

Break up that COLD

Perhaps the surest way to prevent a cold from "catching hold" and getting worse is, at once, to Cleanse Intensely. Do it the pleasant tea-cup way. Flush the system with a hot cup of Garfield Tea—the mild, easy-to-take liquid laxative. At drug stores.

HOW many of you remember Emil Jannings, who was one of our foremost screen actors in the days of silent pictures? A recent picture of his, made in Germany, and called "The Making of a King," is now being shown; it's a talking picture, in German with English sub-titles.

Historically it's interesting; it shows the efforts of Frederick the First of Germany to make his son fit to rule the country. But Jannings suffers by comparison with Charles Laughton. It's impossible not to imagine what Laughton would have done with that role. Save for occasional flashes, Jannings seems just to be a very good actor. And, speaking of Laughton, he's just paid $100,000 for a painting. It's Renoir's famous "The Judgment of Paris," and will probably bring much more than that if he ever wants to sell it. And isn't it nice to think that he is able to buy it because all of us have liked him so much on the screen?

Looks as if that romance between Joan Blondell and Dick Powell is really serious.

Ruth Roland, who long, long ago thrilled everybody in silent serials, will be heard on the air soon—and the young man who's doing the script is somewhat annoyed. The story is a father and son story, (with Ernest Truex playing the father) and he's got to build up the mother's role because Ruth can't be wasted on a small one.

Listen, my children, and you shall hear the strange story of Igor Gorin—you've heard him sing many times recently on the Hollywood Hotel hour (at least, it's your own fault if you haven't heard him; he's been on the air regularly and before that, he was on the air intermittently with Roxy's Gang).

He had sung in Europe before he arrived in this country, a few years ago, but making a name for himself here proved a good deal of a problem. He'd reached the stage where he didn't know just what to do next when someone took him to Roxy, who at that time was at the head of the Radio City Music Hall.

Roxy heard him, and was carried away by that enthusiasm that was responsible for the discovery of so many good singers. He promptly promised young Gorin an engagement.

But Gorin hadn't any evening clothes, and he'd have to have them. "Take him to my tailor," said Roxy to an assistant. "Get him everything he needs and charge the clothes to me."

So Igor Gorin had clothes, and an opportunity to sing for huge audiences, and was so happy that he couldn't believe all this had really happened to him. His magnificent voice delighted the Music Hall's patrons. It delighted other thousands on the air. Everything was perfect.

Then Roxy left the Music Hall and presently Gorin didn't seem to be heard any more.

But he'd got his start. He went to Hollywood. And now he's to have one of the principal roles in "As Thousands Cheer," and has had two telegrams inviting him to sing at the Metropolitan Opera house. Once again his star of good luck is high in the sky.

A theater in North Carolina has been named for Shirley Temple—and is she delighted.

It's always interesting to see what screen stars name their children. Evelyn Venable christened her new daughter Dolores. Joan Bennett belongs to the group that likes quaint, old-fashioned names; she called the first baby she and Gene Markey had Melinda.

If you're considering trying to get your young son or daughter into the movies, ponder a moment on the fact that according to the casting bureaus one child out of every 7,000 makes the grade. Or, if you'd rather, remember that ever since the movies got under way those on the inside have been trying to convince those on the outside that it was practically impossible to get in!

For the first time in history somebody's broadcasting from a dog house. It's Charles Stark, talking from SPCA headquarters in Philadelphia, telling about the dogs that are available for adoption, so if you want a dog, listen in on WMCA or the other stations of that chain.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Bing Crosby rides a bicycle around the lot . . . George O'Brien got hit in the eye by a squash ball and nearly went blind . . . Gladys Scarthout has turned down a fifty-two weeks' radio contract; movies and opera take all her time now . . . Previews of "Captain Blood" make it look likely that Errol Flynn will develop into one of our most popular movie stars.

TUCK A SMART BOW
BENEATH THE CHIN

PATTERN 9601

Surely no Junior Miss can resist the girlishness of this smart two-piece frock. Practical for school in a washable cotton tweed, or dressy enough for an evening date in one of the new metallic-shot woolsens, with velvet bow and belt. Isn't the cut of the shoulder line unusual? The blouse, with darts front and back, is separate, you know, so its pleated skirt may accompany many different blouses.

Pattern 9601 may be ordered only in sizes 10, 12, 14, 16 and 18. Size 12 requires 2½ yards 54 inch fabric and ½ yard 5 inch ribbon. Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 232 W. Eighteenth St., New York, N. Y.

Orland Park Dog
Drinks Beer

Did you ever see a dog drink beer?

Barney Moore at Orland has a little dog who likes his drink of beer as well as a cat does milk. The dog is quite sensible, inasmuch as he does not drink enough beer to get drunk. He drinks out of a special dish and when he feels he has enough, he quits and no amount of coaxing can make him take more.

Orland PTA Dads
Put On Program

"Father's Night" was observed by the Orland Park T. P. A. Thursday night, January 9 in the school auditorium. The regular offices of the Association were occupied by the following dads for the night:

President, Sherman Knox; Secretary, Thomas Cooper; Treasurer,
Thomas Wheeler.

Reports of the various committees were given in brief.
Mr. Wheeler read an interesting and very informative article on
"Where the money to run our schools comes from and where it is spent."

A number of short talks and excerpts from comments by leading men of the nation on the subject of education were given by Thomas Cooper, Lawrence Uthe, Harry Heiting, Thomas Wheeler and Mr. Linden.

Community singing by both the men and women guests was enjoyed by all.

After the meeting the evening was turned over to the program chairman who had provided special dance music for the dancing period of the program.

Refreshments of doughnuts and coffee were served by the men.

All reported having had a very good time and were unanimous in declaring the men royal entertainers. The affair was a success long to be remembered.

BE SURE to attend the meeting of the P. T. A. next month.

citizen to know and appreciate what conservation means. He was most forceful in his remarks against the steel traps.

Mr. Campbell told, because of furriers paying more for ermine, which is the weasel's winter coat,
when it has no marks on it of a trap, the trappers are now catching the little animals by greasing an iron rod and throwing it out in the timber. The little animals are hungry and lick the grease off the iron rod and then their tongue freezes to
it. Sometimes they are in that position for days before the trapper returns. Raising the little animals as one does any farm animal and then killing with an anesthetic was the humane way advocated by Mr.
Campbell, thus not depriving any one of a fur coat who wants one.

The moving pictures in color and otherwise were most interesting, holding the audience spellbound. The glorious sun rise at Three Lakes, Wis., taken by Mr. Campbell in colored films, at his home, "The Sanctuary", was beyond word description.

Mr. Campbell broadcasts each Sunday afternoon from WCFL at 2 o'clock on the "Sanctuary Hour",
and he would appreciate those listening to write to the station and let them know that his program on the radio has a following in America who like something else other than jazz.

Judge Gutnecht, of the Speeder's Court in Chicago was the last speaker. He told of his experiences in the Juvenile court and in the speeder's court. Since he has had charge of this court the fixed tickets have been reduced 90 per cent.
He told of Reputation vs. Character. A witness in court is asked concerning the reputation of the defendant who replies that it is good,
and at the same time the defendant may be a person of very poor character. The answer would be different if the witness was asked concerning the character of the defendant, which is as it should be according to Judge Gutnecht.

Eleven ladies from Orland Park and Tinley Park attended this meeting.

Wilson for Earlier War?
Prayer Plus Planes
New Disease Danger
Ethiopian Victory?

Prof. A. M. Arnett of North Carolina university says it was not Wilson that kept this country

out of war for a while, but the country that kept Wilson out of war
longer than he would have stayed out.

Professor Arnett
says he will prove,
in a book, that Wilson wanted war in 1916, and was kept out of it by three men—Champ Clark,
Congressman Flood
and Claude Kitch-
in, Democratic floor

leader of the house.

How deep should we have sunk in our depression if Woodrow Wilson had carried out his alleged plan and started the war one year ahead of time, in 1916?

How many millions of Americans would have been killed (they were always honored with front row places)? How many tens of billions would have been added to the public debt and the repudiated debts of Europe?

The archbishop of Canterbury, head of the official Church of England, has invited all European Christian communicants to join in prayer for peace,
with resolutions outlawing all war.

While the archbishop takes that desirable step the British government works rapidly on 8,000 airplanes of the fighting kind. Nothing like airplanes to back up eloquent prayer for peace.

Uncle Sam has on his hands the job of preventing the spread of disease throughout the country and its importation from abroad.

Doctor Curran, in charge of insects for the American Museum of Natural History, warns New York it may be invaded by malaria brought into northern New Jersey by a CCC camp worker from the South. The anopheles mosquito, always present, has been spreading the germs. He cannot do that unless he first bites a malaria carrier.

Halle Selassie's fighting Gen. Dejazmach Hailu Kebede sends cheerful
news to his royal master:

"We fought and beat the Italians from dawn to dusk; 200 Italian white soldiers, twenty Italian officers, killed.
Cannon, bombs and innumerable batteries of machine guns made murderous concert against us, but God protected your humble Christian soldiers, and the Lion of Judah was victorious."
Ethiopians persist in their theory that they are the only Christians involved. They say the Italians are Catholics, therefore not Christians, which would amuse the Italians, if they had time for amusement.
Rome calls the General Dejazmach dispatch "customary Ethiopian inaccuracy."

Former Governor Alfred E. Smith, booked for a big political talk in Washington, D. C., and invited by Mrs.
Roosevelt to stop at the White House during his stay in Washington, declines the invitation, explaining that he will have too big a crowd with him.
Politicians do not think that the only reason. They expect Governor Smith to "cut loose" and say things about the administration that would not come gracefully from a White House guest.

Mr. and Mrs. Triplett of Jenkins, Ky., who have just received from heaven their third set of triplets, say: "We are just tickled to death, but imagine our surprise." Besides nine triplets, the happy couple have one set of twins, all eleven living and all fortunate. The baby born in a family that wants babies is the fortunate child.

For the woman or man who does not want children, the wise thing is not to have them—for the children's sake.

Hitler knows what he wants, tells the rest of the world, and thus far the world has let him help himself.
He wanted an end of the Versailles treaty and got it. He wanted the right to build a strong battle fleet and England consented.

Now he says he must have an air force as strong as that of France, and will proceed to build it. He demands also the return of all colonies taken from Germany, and intimates that he will fight for them if he can't get them peaceably.

Austria will pay Uncle Sam on account of debt thirty million schillings, payment in American paper dollars.
At the current rate of exchange Uncle Sam will get $5,634,000. Our paper dollars are convenient for Europeans, for they know, although we do not,
that our dollar is worth 59 cents.

Thomas W. Lamont, a J. Pierpont Morgan & company partner, gives five hundred thousand dollars to establish a "chair of political economy" at Harvard. The money will stay and the interest will be used. Well invested, it should pay the chosen professor a fair salary.

She may be gone but never will be forgotten.

LOVING HUSBAND AND CHILDREN.

MOKENA

Rev. Geo. Deckinger received word that their oldest daughter, Mrs. Lincoln of Detroit, Mich., had the misfortune to be in an auto accident recently. Both she and her son Stanley were badly injured.

Wm. Evtit has been confined to bed since Tuesday with a very bad attack of the flu.

Mrs. Robert Bechstein spent Monday with her brother in the St.
Augustine hospital, Chicago, where he is recovering from a goitre operation.

Kenneth Warning underwent an emergency operation Thursday night in Silver Cross hospital.

Bidwill Candidate
For State Auditor

Former Senator Arthur J. Bidwill, Thursday evening, January 9, at his home in River Forest, Ill., announced to his local committeemen that he is a candidate for State Auditor.

Senator Bidwill made this announcement following his unanimous endorsement by the Cook County Country Towns Republican Leaders, many organizations, and at the solicitations of his numerous downstate friends.

Bidwill's friends thruout the State believe that his name on the Republican ticket will be not only a vindication of his outrageous ouster by the Democratic majority in the Senate at Springfield, but will add considerable strength to the parties' success at the election in November.

Lake-Cook Co.,

10 a. m.

Many interesting items are on the program for the day, one of which is the paying of dividends to the stockholders amounting to about $3
